Please provide any historical evidence or reference data:

In the fields around Christleton, there are numerous stiles with carved sandstone piers and timber or metal crossbars set in carved recesses. Nothing is known of their origin or the landowner responsible for their high quality specification. They are most likely to be Victorian, possibly an initiative by Canon Garnett.

The Cheshire County archive has a report by a Dr Brian produced in 1970 that claims these stiles were erected in the 18th century. The map above is based on the 1970 survey.
